Mike Duffy says some students 'brainwashed'

CRITICISM Senator Mike Duffy isn't backing down on his criticisms of the University of King's College and other Canadian journalism programs, saying he "dared to show a little spotlight on some of the bias in the media."

Last weekend, Duffy delivered a speech to local Conservatives in Amherst criticizing journalism schools for teaching critical thinking and Noam Chomsky's book Manufacturing Consent. He also said students aren't being taught to be fair and balanced.

"They all get preached to with the same cookie cutter thing," Duffy told Tom Young's Afternoon News program on Rogers radio Thursday. "And when you talk to these kids in job interviews, you realize some of them have been brainwashed."

Metro Halifax again requested an interview with Duffy on Thursday, but didn't get a response.

Province undecided on funding for $300M convention site

PAUL MCLEOD
paul.mcleod@metronews.ca

As the debate intensifies, the province has set a deadline on whether to fund a new convention centre for downtown Halifax. But that deadline could be worrisome for development advocates.

Infrastructure Renewal Minister Bill Estabrooks said Thursday he plans to bring the contentious issue of whether to support an estimated $300-million convention centre on Argyle Street to his cabinet colleagues on April 19.

The date falls weeks after the provincial budget will be released. That would seem to imply there's no convention centre money set aside for 2010-11, but Estabrooks said that's not necessarily the case.

"You can't take that as a given," he said. "To be truthful, I'm not sure of the details of it, but we're proceeding along as we make the final decision of whether this is going to be a go or not."

Estabrooks described the April 19 meeting as a "potential off-ramp" on whether or not to go forward with a new centre.

He also said there is no guaranteed money from the federal government, which could put much more strain on a province already running a half-billion dollar deficit.

Developer Joe Ramia is already underway demolishing the old Chronicle Herald and Midtown Tavern buildings to make room for the potential new trade centre.

Those for and against the centre have increasingly divided into camps in recent days. Trade Centre Limited estimates Nova Scotia has lost 70 conferences and $4 million in tax revenue over the last three years. One online petition to support a new centre has gained over 730 signatures in the last two weeks.

Meanwhile, the Coalition to Save the View from Citadel Hill released data Thursday from a University of Texas professor showing event attendance for conventions has been dropping.

According to the coalition, Dr. Heywood Sanders's research shows attendance dropped in the top 50 Canadian events by one-third between 1998 and 2008, despite exhibit space growing by 11 per cent.

Justice Dept. set to urge arm's-length investigations of police

COMMISSION Staff from the Nova Scotia Justice Department confirm they plan to introduce legislation this spring to create an arm's-length commission to handle investigations of police agencies.

There is no timetable yet for when the body would be in place to begin operations, nor is it known who would sit on the board. But Thursday Premier Darrell Dexter told reporters the agency could be outsourced to other Atlantic provinces.

Currently police rely on internal investigations or they can pass it off to another investigation. The tensions in that system came to light recently when the Nova Scotia RCMP claimed they couldn't discipline one of their officers who shot a Wagmatcook man to death because a Halifax Regional Police investigation had taken too long.

HRP rejected that claim, saying the RCMP could have launched its own review at any time. HRP spokeswoman Theresa Rath said Thursday the force very much supports an independent investigation unit.

"It places these types of investigations at arm's length and provides a board that's independent of police agencies," she said.

"We think it would really increase the public confidence in this process."

Police probe south-end assault

PHILIP CROUCHER
philip.croucher@metronews.ca

Halifax Regional Police are investigating a "very shocking" incident after a 19-year-old Dalhousie University student was grabbed from behind by a man while walking in south-end Halifax on Wednesday night.

Police say at 9 p.m., the female victim was walking alone on South Street near Henry Street when she was grabbed by a man who attempted to pull her into an alley between two houses.

A man and woman walking by saw what was happening, police say, and inquired what was going on. Police allege this startled the suspect and the victim was able to escape.

Police say the victim reported the incident to police five hours later. She wasn't injured, but "very shaken."

"This is as alarming to

Any relation?

• Halifax Regional Police spokeswoman Theresa Rath said it's too early to tell whether this alleged incident is related to the person they are looking for in relation to a sexual assault in the Halifax's south end last month.

• In the early morning hours of Feb. 7, police say a 20-year-old victim and her friend were walking home in the area of Queen and Morris streets when a man reached under the victim's skirt and touched her when he approached them. Police say the suspect later produced a small, pipe-like object and threatened both women.

police as it is to the public," commented police spokeswoman Theresa Rath "We're going to do as much as possible to garner more information.

"It's very shocking."

Police say the victim wasn't able to give a good description of the suspect. The only thing police have is he's white and has a deep voice.

Police are looking to speak with the man and woman who passed by when the alleged assault took place to see if they can offer more information.

University spokesman Billy Comeau told Metro the victim was a Dalhousie student, but gave no other details.

Due to the incident that took place near the Dalhousie campus, the university issued a security bulletin through email to students and staff to let them know of the alleged assault.

"We just want to make people aware of the incident," Comeau said. "We always encourage our students to be aware of their surroundings and to take all precautions when they're out travelling."

Nursing home lifts ban on visitors

VIRUS SCARE Capital Health has lifted restrictions at a nursing home in Musquodoboit Harbour, but is keeping them in place at a nursing unit at the Halifax Infirmary site of the QEII Health Sciences Centre in Halifax.

The nursing home was closed to visitors for almost two weeks after some patients and staff fell ill with norovirus-like symptoms.

On Monday, Capital Health announced four patients and one staff member at Nursing Unit 4.1 at the infirmary site were exhibiting symptoms of norovirus, also known as Norwalk virus.

Greenpeace activists carry a coffin with a cod head inside as they walk in front of the Queen Street Sobeys on Thursday. The group is urging Sobeys and other supermarkets to stop selling Atlantic cod to allow the fish stocks to recover.

Protest takes aim at Sobeys

ALEX BOUTILIER
For Metro Halifax

WILDLIFE Protesters held a mock funeral for declining Atlantic Cod stocks outside the Sobeys on Queen Street in north-end Halifax on Thursday.

Eight Greenpeace members clad in black followed a hearse into the parking lot around 11 a.m., and removed a coffin from the back. Inside the coffin, which was laid outside the store's main entrance, was a rotting cod head.

Within minutes, the protest moved off the property at the request of Sobeys employees.

Greenpeace spokeswoman Sarah King, of Vancouver, said Sobeys has a responsibility to protect the species future.

"Atlantic cod stocks have seen declines over the past decades and we continue to fish them to death," King said. "As a Maritime company, (Sobeys has) an added responsibility to ensure a future for the seafood that they sell... They should be stewards of the ocean, not fishing them to death."

King added Sobeys was not the only ones responsible for the decline in stocks, but said they were the only retailer that refused to act on Greenpeace urgings to address the problem.

"Everybody has a responsibility," she said. "The Department of Fisheries and Oceans sets the quotas. They set it from pressure from the fisheries. And the fisheries are fishing it because consumers and retailers want to sell it."

Representatives from Sobeys did not return calls on Thursday.

Man facing charges after alleged road rage incident

CRIME A 26-year-old man has been charged in relation to an alleged road rage incident last week that saw the victim punched in the face and have his front driver's side window smashed out.

Halifax RCMP say the 26-year-old was arrested Thursday afternoon in relation to the incident last Friday evening on the St. Margarets Bay Road.

Police say a 20-year-old man was driving his 2005 Ford Escape westbound by Exit 2 near Highway 103 when a Honda Civic came along on the merge lane.

Police say the female driver of the Civic ran out of room, pulled behind the Ford Escape and tailgated the vehicle.

The victim pulled over to let the car go by, say police, but the female driver stopped, got out and screamed at him to get out.

A male passenger then exited the Honda Civic and police allege the man came up and punched out the driver's side window and punched the victim in the face as he drove away.

Police say the suspect has been released and will appear in Halifax provincial court on May 26 charged with assault and mischief under $5,000. No charges are being laid against the female driver.

The 21-year-old, who is in his home province of Newfoundland and Labrador on bail, was not present at a hearing in a St. Catharines court on Wednesday, according to the Niagara Falls Review.

RCMP's Operation Hawkeye to check for theft-prone vehicles

PREVENTION Halifax RCMP will start checking vehicles in neighbourhoods during the evening and overnight hours to see if they're prone to theft.

Titled Operation Hawkeye, the new program will see officers check vehicles to see how secure they are and if any valuables are left in view, which could lead to theft.

Police say they have seen an increase in theft from vehicles over the past several months — many of which take place overnight when vehicles are parked in driveways or on streets in front of residences.

"We're going to be out patrolling on foot, checking neighbourhoods and checking vehicles," said police spokesman Cpl. Joe Taplin.

He said the program would last through the summer and possibly into fall. Taplin said if a vehicle isn't secured properly or is prone to theft, officers would get in contact with the vehicle's owner during the day to advise them of what they saw.

Taplin said from December through February, Halifax RCMP received 188 complaints from vehicles being broken into. There were 76 complaints from both Cole Harbour and Sackville, 20 from Tantallon and 14 from Musquodoboit.

"It seems there are always people out there breaking into vehicles," he said. "It's just a crime of opportunity for them."

Police are reminding the public that tips to avoid being prone to theft include locking your vehicle and putting valuables out of sight, preferably into one's residence.

Finance Minister Graham Steele speaks with reporters in this file photo from last year. Steele is telling government departments to avoid the rush on spending that occurs near the end of the fiscal year.

Minister orders stop to 'March madness'

NDP not following own directives: Opposition

paul.mcleod@metronews.ca

The province is putting a halt to "March madness" spending by civil servants, says Finance Minister Graham Steele.

A letter to senior bureaucrats dated March 4 from the treasury board directs them not to make any unplanned year-end spending.

Steele said the letter was meant to defuse the idea that if departments don't spend their entire budget it will be cut down the following year. He said he heard at almost every Back To Balance meeting with the public they believe departments go on a spending spree in March.

"We do want to make sure civil servants get the message that the kind of spending where you spend money for the sake of spending money will not be tolerated," he said.

Steele said the treasury board is keeping close watch and if frivolous spending is discovered it will be dealt with on an individual basis.

The Liberals were unconvinced the letter would be enough.

Several tenders went out in recent days with deadlines right before the March 31 end of fiscal year. One tender for the first phase of Bluenose II restoration was posted March 18 and closes just four days later.

Many tenders end in the two days before the fiscal year ends, including contracts for portable radios and to carpet and floor office buildings.

Liberal Leader Stephen McNeil said the most egregious spending was the NDP topping up the Industrial Expansion Fund — an economic development pot controlled by cabinet — with $75 million at the beginning of this month.

"If it didn't come out of departments, he's borrowed the money. And that's end of the year spending," McNeil said.

"It's pretty rich for Graham Steele to be telling civil servants to live within their budgets when their own government's not doing it."

Railway says it needs 5-year subsidy to survive

CAPE BRETON A railway that serves Cape Breton has told the Nova Scotia government it needs $2 million annually for the next five years to keep operating.

Percy Paris, the minister of economic development, says RailAmerica Inc. informed him the only rail service between Nova Scotia's mainland and the island could close without the assistance.

He says he'll bring the proposal to cabinet, but no decision has been taken yet on the Cape Breton and Central Nova Scotia Railway's future.

"If they don't get the money I would suspect what will happen is ... that they will just let the spur (line) go, to wherever spurs go when they die," said the cabinet minister.

The government recently ended a subsidy to a catamaran ferry service that travelled from Yarmouth to Maine.

Paris says he will do a separate assessment on the train service and decide whether provincial funds are required to keep it running.

He says the company's current five-year agreement with the province is set to expire in a few weeks and the assessment on the proposal should occur in that time period.

"We are evaluating it now ... that will be in front of cabinet in the next few weeks," he said.

Kevin McCrindle, who coached with St. Peter, said the team knew something was wrong when neither he nor his son showed up for the start of the game in Cole Harbour.

"Some of the players were trying to get a hold of him before the game. They were texting his son but they couldn't get a hold of him," said McCrindle, adding St. Peter loved coaching and was highly thought of by the players.

St. Peter, 49, was pronounced dead at the scene following a single-vehicle crash at 7:34 a.m. on Highway 102 between the Brookfield and the Truro Power Centre exits. The car hit the shoulder of the road and rolled over three times before coming to rest in the southbound lane.

St. Peter's wife, who was driving the car, and his 12-year-old son were taken to Colchester Regional Hospital treated and released before noon.

Traffic was backed up near the Truro Power Centre overpass following the accident. Police closed the road and rerouted traffic to Highway 2 for about three hours to investigate and clear the scene.

A mechanical inspection is being done to try to determine what caused the crash. The driver of the vehicle told police she heard "a pop" and the mechanical inspection was to determine items, including, if a blown tire caused the crash.

HRP report into shooting death baffles band lawyer

The lawyer for the Wagmatcook First Nation says a Halifax Regional Police report that cleared an RCMP officer of any criminal wrongdoing in a fatal shooting failed to make logical conclusions based on the facts it uncovered.

Gary Richard, the Truro-based lawyer who represents the band in the community, submitted a 10-page legal analysis of the report Thursday to the Wagmatcook council on the Dec. 2, 2008, shooting death of John Simon.

He highlighted the police report's finding that Const. Jeremy Frenette was told to "stay put" and wait for an emergency-response team to arrive from Halifax.

Frenette instead entered Simon's house and ended up shooting the allegedly suicidal and intoxicated man three times, though HRP concluded he did so in self-defence.

Richard said he can't understand why the HRP report doesn't emphasize Frenette's failure to follow the original plan.

"What the report ignores is there was a proper coherent operational plan in place that evening which, if followed, would have likely resulted in a resolution of the circumstances that didn't involve shooting an emotionally distraught man three times and killing him," Richard said in his report.

Richard said he was confused by a conclusion in the report that says

Frenette was not given "concise directions and/or a plan ... to successfully resolve a critical incident."

"This is a frankly baffling statement," Richard said. "Staff Sgt. (Archie) Thompson gave notably concise directions and a plan at the outset of the incident: 'Sit tight, ERT was on the way.'"

Richard said it's questionable Frenette was within his rights to climb through the window of Simon's house and confront the 44-year-old man.

HRP declined comment.

Graham said the Conservatives have to be taken to task on issues such as post-secondary education and the future of NB Power.

For weeks, Graham has been calling on Tory Leader David Alward to produce his plan for the debt-laden utility.

Graham is proposing to sell 10 power plants to Hydro-Quebec for $3.2 billion under a deal that would freeze residential power rates for five years and cut rates for large industrial customers by 23 per cent.

But Graham has faced public opposition over the plan, with protests and petitions urging him to drop the deal.

He hopes to finalize the agreement with Quebec by May 21.

"We provided our plan, we're the only political party that has done so, and that's why it's reflected today in the polls," Graham said.

One recent poll suggested Graham was the least popular premier in Canada.

G20 must pursue bank reform: Harper

PM lays out market guidelines at 'sherpas' meeting

The G20 nations must keep trade markets open, strengthen banking regulations and nurture a sustained and balanced recovery from the world economic crisis, Prime Minister Stephen Harper says.

Those were the priorities Harper laid out for the "sherpas," the senior bureaucrats who are holding two days of meetings in Ottawa to lay out the agenda for June's economic summit in Toronto.

Harper said recovery is by no means fully assured,

Harper's G20 suggestions

• Harper laid out five guidelines he said the G20's chief negotiators should follow, including balancing stimulus measures with exit strategies, building on a global framework for "balanced and sustainable" growth, advancing reforms to international financial institutions, and keeping markets open. Harper also said it's time to look beyond the crisis measures that have driven world economics for the last year or so.

and he said the G20 will be judged not just by its ability to respond to crisis, but also "its capacity to lead the world through recovery and beyond."

Canadians safe after boat hits reef in Galapagos

ACCIDENT Sixteen Canadian tourists exploring the Galapagos Islands were rescued from a reef after the yacht they were travelling on ran aground, the tour operator said Thursday.

Fernando Diez, public relations manager for Quazar Expeditions in Ecuador, said the yacht Alta struck the reef at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday while trying to dock at Puerto Ayora in Ecuador.

The accident was caused in part by lack of illumination from a lighthouse that was unexpectedly darkened, he said, but the cap-

Afghan documents debate heats up

OTTAWA The opening shots have been fired in the Commons in what could become a bitter war over Parliament's right to know and the government's right to keep secrets.

Opposition MPs have fumed for months over the government's refusal to hand over documents on the Afghan detainee issue. They now are seeking a formal ruling from the Speaker that the refusal is a violation of parliamentary privilege. They say the government is mocking parliamentary rights that date back centuries by denying MPs access to the material.

Liberal Bob Rae says national security is a concern for all MPs, but there are ways to maintain it while allowing them to do their

FINANCE Stop buying those lattes or splurging on spring break vacations. David Dodge, former governor of the Bank of Canada, says Canadians need to save far more if they want to retire comfortably — even those Canadians who think they have great company pension plans and solid RRSPs. In a study on savings for the C.D. Howe Institute, Dodge finds that if Canadians want to maintain the same standard of living after they retire, they need to stash away between 10 and 21 per cent of their pre-tax earnings every year if they save for 35 years. For Canadians over the age of 35 who have not kept up with their savings, they'll need to put aside far more than 20 per cent of their income, the paper says.

EU gives polar bear hunters a break

U.S.-backed bid to ban trade in bear parts is thrown out

Canadian Inuit got some help from an unlikely corner Thursday when the European Union rejected a motion to ban the international trade of polar bear parts.

The result assured the defeat of the U.S.-backed proposal.

"I think that's great," said Chucky Gruben, a polar bear hunter from Tuktoyaktuk, N.W.T.

"I'm glad to hear this was defeated."

The EU has angered the Inuit in the past over issues such as the seal hunt.

But on Thursday it was the union's 27 member states voting in a block at the 175-nation Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species that prevented polar bear skins from being put in the same category as elephant ivory.

"It's basically the EU that stood in the way," said Teresa Telesky of Humane Society International, who is at the meeting in Doha, Qatar. "If it hadn't been for the EU, we would have won this debate."

If the motion had passed, it would have placed further obstacles in the way of the economically valuable sport hunt and completely ended the ability of Inuit hunters to sell the skins of animals they kill for meat.

Mary Simon, head of Canada's national Inuit group Inuit Tapiriit Kanatami, was pleased with the news but cautious.

"On first reaction, it's a very good sign for us," she said from Ottawa. "There is a possibility the U.S. could come back to revise the rejected proposal and put it to a vote."

But Christine Eustis, a spokesperson for the U.S. delegation, said that's unlikely. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Pilot's threat scared crew

FLIGHT An Air Canada pilot may have said he had nothing to lose but did not threaten to ditch his plane in the Atlantic during a dispute with the chief flight steward, the airline said Thursday.

The case ended up in Federal Court after flight attendants, fearing the pilot might have been suicidal, refused to fly with him.

In siding with the attendants, Judge John O'Keefe found an investigator was wrong to conclude the conflict between pilot and steward was a "normal condition" of employment.

Instead, O'Keefe ruled this month, the investigator should have first decided whether the pilot's alleged mental state did in fact constitute a danger.

Airline spokesperson Peter Fitzpatrick said a thorough investigation turned up no safety issues. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Widow's testimony blocked

Suzanne Trepanier has requested permission to appear at the Foreign Affairs committee to defend her husband's record and provide her version of events she believes contributed to his fatal heart attack following an agency board meeting in January.

Rights and Democracy, a taxpayer-funded agency, has been in turmoil for months as factions on the board battled over three small grants to Middle East groups that are critical of Israel.

The committee must agree to the witness list and Conservative Jim Abbott has begun a filibuster to prevent the issue from coming to a vote.

Abbott said hearing from Beauregard's widow "would be an emotional reaction to a situation over which this committee has absolutely no control." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Stage set for U.S. health vote

Democrats desperately hoping for Sunday passage of contentious bill

Democratic leaders unveiled what is expected to be their final health-care bill Thursday, setting the stage for a Sunday vote on a plan that would affect most Americans and has become the defining issue in Barack Obama's presidency.

Leaving nothing to chance, the White House announced Obama has put off his planned trip to Asia for a second time, delaying it until June. Obama was to have left Sunday.

Said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi: "He wants to be here for the history."

The plan would cost $940 billion over 10 years and extend coverage to 32 million Americans who are uninsured, while reducing the federal deficit by $138 billion over 10 years, the impartial Congressional Budget Office said, and continue to drive down red ink thereafter. Democratic leaders said the deficit would be cut $1.2 trillion in the second decade.

The plan would restructure one-sixth of the U.S. economy in the biggest expansion of the social-safety net since Medicare, a government-run health plan for the elderly, was created in 1965.

Although the vote is expected Sunday, passage is still not assured. With Republicans unanimous in opposition, Obama needs to win over moderate House Democrats, some of whom are wary about the plan's costs and abortion provisions.

Still, Obama appears on the verge of a victory on the signature issue of his presidency, just two months after it appeared all but dead. Democrats in January lost a Senate seat in a special election, denying them the 60-vote supermajority needed to overcome Republican blocking tactics. But Democrats are using a complicated legislative strategy, over strenuous Republican objections, to get the bill through both the House and Senate. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sex.com auction cancelled

BANKRUPTCY The suitors for Sex.com have been put off for now.

An auction for the much-sought-after domain name was cancelled after three creditors filed a petition forcing the owner into bankruptcy.

Mike Mann, an investor with all three creditors, said the petition was filed to stop the auction. According to the petition, the creditors have a combined $10.1-million claim. Selling the domain name at an auction was not going to enhance its value, he said.

"It's gone way up in value," he said. "It's the most valuable domain in the world. They were throwing away the world's most valuable domain asset."

Escom LLC paid a reported $12 million to $14 million for the domain name in 2006, but was unable to repay the debt. The lender ordered the foreclosure sale.

Richard Maltz, whose company is handling the sale, declined to give specifics on interested parties, which included People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rocket kills farm worker near Gaza

JERUSALEM Palestinian militants fired a rocket at Israel from the Gaza Strip yesterday, killing a Thai farm worker, Israeli medics said, in the first death from such an attack since the Gaza offensive last year.

Magen David Adom, the emergency service, said the man was about 30 years old and was working in an agricultural community just north of Gaza, one of the tens of thousands of foreign labourers doing menial jobs in Israel.

A small Islamist faction calling itself Ansar al-Sunna claimed responsibility for the attack. The Al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades also later claimed responsibility.

Yesterday's attack came on the same day as a visit to Gaza by Europe's top diplomat, EU foreign policy chief Catherine Ashton, who had just crossed into the territory. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Police said in a statement yesterday they had to use force to shackle the man because he refused to board the plane. The shackles were taken off and a doctor tried to save the man's life when he suddenly showed health problems. He had been on hunger strike for several days. Swiss authorities have cancelled all forced deportation flights pending an inquiry. Amnesty International says it was the third such death in Switzerland since 1999. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Auschwitz thieves jailed up to 2 years

POLAND A Polish court convicted three men Thursday of the theft of the notorious Arbeit Macht Frei (Work Sets You Free) sign from the Auschwitz memorial site in December.

In footage from court, the men's faces were blurred, and each expressed regret in stealing the sign. The court identified them only as Radoslaw M., Lukasz M., and Pawel S., in keeping with Polish privacy laws.

The theft occurred in the night between Dec. 17 and Dec. 18, a brazen heist that shocked Holocaust survivors and others committed to preserving the Auschwitz-Birkenau site. A Swedish man with a neo-Nazi background, Anders Hogstrom, is also a suspect and in custody. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Proposed tuna ban defeated at UN wildlife trade meeting

A U.S.-backed proposal to ban the export of Atlantic bluefin tuna prized in sushi was rejected Thursday by a UN wildlife meeting, with scores of developing nations joining Japan in opposing a measure they feared would devastate fishing economies.

It was a stunning setback for conservationists who had hoped the 175-nation Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, or CITES, would give the fish a lifeline. They joined the proposal's sponsor Monaco in arguing that extreme measures were necessary because the stocks have fallen by 75 per cent due to widespread overfishing.

"Let's take science and throw it out the door," said Susan Lieberman, director of international policy with the Pew Environment Group in Washington. "Clearly, there was pressure from the fishing interests."

As the debate opened, Monaco painted a dire picture for a once-abundant species that can grow to as big as 1,500 pounds. It has been done in by the growing demand for raw tuna for traditional dishes such as sushi and sashimi.

"This exploitation is no longer exploitation by traditional fishing people to meet regional needs,"

Monaco's Patrick Van Klaveren told delegates. "We are facing a real ecosystem collapse."

But it became clear that the proposal had little support. Only the United States, Norway and Kenya supported the proposal outright. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Teen's case linked: Cops

The case of an Italian teenager who disappeared in 1993 has returned to the spotlight after decomposed remains believed to be hers were discovered in the church where she was last seen, police said Thursday.

At the same time, an unsolved 2002 murder in Britain has resurfaced, with British police linking their case with the disappearance of the teen.

Elisa Claps vanished from her hometown of Potenza on Sept. 12, 1993 at the age of 16.

She was last seen in the Most Holy Trinity church in downtown Potenza with an acquaintance, Danilo Restivo, who later acknowledged that he had spent about 10 minutes in the church with her before leaving.

Restivo has denied wrongdoing. He remains under investigation in the case, his lawyer Mario Marinelli said Thursday. He said his client was living in Britain and was calm.

Elisa Claps

Police in Dorset, meanwhile, linked the disappearance of Claps with the slaying of a British woman, Heather Barnett, whose mutilated body was found by her two children in the bathroom of her home in Bournemouth in 2002. "Strands of cut hair, not belonging to her, were placed in her right hand," the police statement said. Police linked the two cases in a statement.

Dubai resort frees whale shark

ANIMALS A resort hotel on one of Dubai's manmade islands said Thursday it has freed a whale shark whose captivity had been criticized by environmentalists.

The Atlantis hotel on the city-state's Palm Jumeirah island said it released the four-metre female shark into the Persian Gulf, but did not provide documentation.

Whale sharks, the largest fish in the world, are considered a threatened species.

Atlantis vice-president Steve Kaiser said in a written response to questions the animal has been fitted with a satellite tracking tag to record its position for research purposes.

He said the shark was in good health when it was released Thursday morning off the east side of the palm-shaped island, one of several artificial islands off the city-state's coast. Out-

"The health and well being of the animal has always been our number 1 priority."

Atlantis Hotel vice-president Steve Kaiser

siders were not invited for the safety of the shark, he said.

"The health and well being of the animal has always been our number 1 priority," Kaiser said in response to questions from The Associated Press about the release. "The seasonal elements affecting water temperature, salinity and migratory patterns were perfect for enhancing her survival in the open ocean."

Employees outside the hotel's massive aquarium, which contains 65,000 fish, stingrays and other sea creatures, said they had been instructed not to speak to the media about the shark.

The hotel is run by Bahamas-based Kerzner International in partnership with a division of Dubai's struggling state-run conglomerate Dubai World.

Environmentalists began calling for the shark's release shortly after the hotel announced it had rescued it from the shallow waters off Dubai's coast in 2008.

The huge fish also brought the luxury marine-themed hotel's centre-piece aquarium considerable publicity.

A hotel gift shop continued to sell Atlantis-branded toy models of the whale shark late Thursday afternoon.

Russian-built plant to start up

IRAN Prime Minister Vladimir Putin said Thursday that Iran's new Russian-built nuclear power plant will begin operating this summer, even as the United States called for Russia to delay the startup.

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, in Moscow on an official trip, urged Russia not to start up the plant until Tehran proves that it's not developing atomic weapons.

But Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov, at a joint news conference with Clinton, immediately responded that Russia would put the reactor online.

Putin, who is expected to meet with Clinton Friday, was on a trip to southern Russia when he said Moscow was committed to starting operations at the Iranian atomic power plant.

"The first reactor at Iran's nuclear power plant in Bushehr is to be launched already in the summer," Putin said.

He didn't mention an exact startup date or add any other details during his meeting with nuclear officials. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

To paraphrase a famous American: I knew Mike Duffy, senator, and you're no Mike Duffy.

I couldn't help thinking that as I read Halifax Metro's account this week of Duffy's inane, ill-tempered and spectacularly ill-informed rant about the King's College Journalism School to 60 Cumberland County Conservatives. Full disclosure: I teach at King's.

"Kids who go to King's, or the other (journalism) schools across the country, are taught from two main texts," Duffy huffed. Those texts are Noam Chomsky's Manufacturing Consent and some other unnamed tome on the "theory of critical thinking," which, to Duffy, appears to mean subversive.

"When you put critical thinking together with Noam Chomsky," Duffy puffed, "what you've got is a group of people who are taught from the ages of 18, 19 and 20, that what we stand for, private enterprise ... is bad."

Uh... Earth to Mike: Noam is not on the curriculum at King's. And critical thinking? What were you thinking? What were you drinking?

"When I went to the school of hard knocks," Duffy explained, taking refuge in the last refuge of any guy who is long past his best-before date, "we were told to be fair and balanced. That school doesn't exist any more."

Yes it does, Mike. It's called journalism school. We still teach that fair-and-balanced mantra your soft Senate sinecure has long since hard-knocked out of whatever was left of your own critical thinking. Only we do it far better now.

Trust me on that. I may teach in what you consider an effete journalism school, but I learned my trade in the same hit-and-miss school of hard knocks you did.

The irony — worth remembering if only for the sake of nostalgia — is that Mike Duffy was once a very good reporter. When I was a junior journalist at CJCH Radio in Halifax in the early '70s, Duffy was a star at CHNS, our bitter cross-town rival. He was energetic, driven. His skepticism about everyone and everything — call it critical thinking — made him an equal-opportunity skewerer of all he encountered. Fair and balanced?

Somewhere along the line, however, Duffy gave up thinking, let alone critically. He even used his last journalistic bully pulpit at CTV to brazenly audition for the ultra-soft-knock job of Tory senator. By the time he'd officially become a wind-up toy for Stephen Harper, he'd long since become a parody of the journalist he once was. Pity.

I knew Mike Duffy, and you, senator, are no Mike Duffy.

Want to survive a fire? Take a look up

Marketplace

metronews.ca/johnson

Geri and Peter Crawshaw thought they had picked out a great retirement home in Orillia, Ont., for Peter's aging mom Betty — until a fire broke out last year and she suffered major smoke inhalation. Four other residents died.

What they learned too late was, the home wasn't equipped with sprinklers — a device firefighters say is key to controlling not just flames, but smoke. Smoke is what kills most people in a fire.

"I never gave it a thought. I never looked up," said Geri Crawshaw. And who would?

But in a national survey of older nursing homes and retirement homes, CBC Marketplace discovered a patchwork of regulations when it comes to sprinklers in older homes, leaving tens of thousands of seniors with no protection.

In Ontario, three deadly fires have led to three coroner's inquests, all calling for sprinklers to be installed retroactively in long-term care homes. Three times, those calls have been ignored by the Ontario government. Newly built homes must have sprinklers, but not older ones.

But sprinklers are just one thing to look for if you're considering putting a loved one in a long-term care home. We've put together some tips to help you navigate the waters.

Visit in person. Be sure to visit the home and talk to people who live there, or who have family in the home. Do more than one tour and show up unannounced. Ask to see different floors in a home, including any locked areas. And visit at different times of day, including during meals, and at night.

Check compliance reports. Your province may have reports online for long-term care homes that will tell you about potential problems.

Ask about staffing levels. What's the staff-to-resident ratio? Does it change at night? Ask to see what the fire evacuation plan is overnight.

Talk to people. If the home has a family council, talk to the people who sit on the board.

Look up. If the home doesn't have sprinklers, ask why not and whether they might be installed soon. Ontario fire chiefs — and their counterparts in other provinces — have been calling for older homes to be retroactively fitted for sprinklers for years. Ask your elected politicians why that hasn't happened.

Friday night on CBC Television at 8:30, watch what happens when Marketplace sets two rooms on fire — one equipped with a sprinkler, the other without.

Erica Johnson is a journalist and co-host of Marketplace, which airs each Friday night at 8:30 on CBC Television.

Economy taking off?

Signs good, but economists are cautious

Foreigners are buying up Canada, the loonie is heading for parity with the American dollar and recent economic indicators are off the map. Could the recovery be out-racing expectations?

The prime minister is a skeptic, and so too are economists at the TD Bank, who released a forecast yesterday of moderate growth for the next two years.

The bank says Canadians shouldn't get overly excited about the surprisingly strong five per cent fourth quarter of 2009 jump, and likely strong numbers coming for the first three months this year.

"The basic story is the economic recovery is real — we are not going to have a double dip (slump) — but the economy is not going to boomerang," said TD's deputy chief economist, Craig Alexander.

In an address to G20 bureaucrats Thursday morning, Prime Minister

"The economic recovery is real."

Craig Alexander, TD Bank

Since last summer, the economy has produced 159,000 jobs, replacing just over a third of the 417,000 jobs wiped out during the 2008-2009 recession.

But while analysts say it is wise for governments to remain cautious about the recovery, a growing number of economic observers are also starting to rethink the modest, steady growth scenario.

Merrill Lynch chief economist Sheryl King says she would not be surprised if Canada experienced a "triplet" of five per cent quarters — last quarter of 2009, first and second quarters of this year. Although King says things must slow after that.

And the Bank of Montreal's Douglas Porter believes if there is an economic surprise this year, it's that growth will be significantly stronger than the official forecasts of about three per cent.

Nafta trade dropped sharply over last year

ECONOMY Last year's collapse of the North American auto sector caused trade with the U.S. and Mexico to suffer its worst year since the North American Free Trade Agreement went into effect 15 years ago, the U.S. Transportation Department said yesterday.

Although trade ended the year on a good note, it fell by 23.3 per cent overall in 2009 compared with 2008.

That marked the largest annual decrease since NAFTA went into effect in 1994 as the value of products that were shipped by truck, rail and pipeline between Canada, the United States and Mexico dropped to $637 billion US in 2009.

The value of trade decreased by 31.1 per cent during the first six months of the year, and by 14.9 per cent in the second half.

The year ended with a 10.5 per cent increase in December compared with 2008, the only month that saw a year-over-year increase.

One Toyota sign may be going up

MARKETING The new owners of the Chicago Cubs are working with automaker Toyota on a sponsorship deal that could put the company's logo on a sign hoisted high above the left field bleachers at Wrigley Field in time for the home opener next month.

The red-coloured 16-by-22-foot Toyota sign would partially block a sign for a casino on a roof across the street. "It's a way for us to generate additional revenue and preserve the history," said Wally Hayward, the Cubs' vice-president.

Business in brief

ENERGY Pure Energy Services Ltd. booked a $3.1-million loss in the first quarter as revenues weakened alongside lower natural gas prices. That compares with a profit of $1.5 million a year ago. Revenue from continuing operations slipped to $37.1 million from $40.4 million as drilling and completion activity remained low across its North American operations. Pure Energy operates in Western Canada and in the United States through its wholly owned subsidiaries. Pure Energy Services Ltd. noted that some of the company's customers experienced tighter lending conditions, which also left a mark on their quarterly results.

Gas prices continue rise

PRICES U.S. motorists are paying the highest prices for gas since October 2008.

Retail gasoline prices rose on Thursday on an expected increase in demand and as more expensive spring and summer blends of gasoline make their way to the pumps.

The U.S. average hit $2.799 US per gallon (73 cents Cdn per litre), a penny higher than Wednesday.

In Canada, the average gasoline price hit $1.03688 per litre yesterday, up from 87.623 cents a year ago.

Gasoline prices tend to move higher in the spring as more drivers hit the road and refiners shut down units for maintenance, as they prepare to make more expensive summer blends of gasoline with fewer smog-causing emissions.

Oil industry profits set to rise to $8B: Board

Oil industry profits will see a big boost this year as some of the cost-dampening effects of the recession linger, according to a forecast by the Conference Board of Canada.

However, the business think-tank cautioned the price of labour and materials is poised to rise in future years as the pace of development picks up in the oil-sands.

"The recession had one positive effect — costs in the industry have come down precipitously," said the report released Thursday.

Numerous oilsands producers began to put their multibillion-dollar projects on hold in late 2008, as the recession whittled away at demand for fossil fuels and made it too costly for companies to borrow money.

Investment in the sector contracted by 26.4 per cent last year, causing capital costs to decline at a similar rate, the Conference Board said.

Many of those delayed oil-sands projects have since been put on the front burner. Increased production from those projects, along with stronger crude oil prices, has led the Conference Board to predict oil industry prof-

Revenue

- Revenues for the industry are forecast to be $69.9 billion this year, only slightly higher than 2009, but are expected to climb an average of more than 14 per cent each year for the next four years, hitting nearly $120 billion in 2014.

its of $8.1 billion this year.

That's two-thirds higher than the $4.9 billion the industry eked out last year, but still half what it raked in at the height of the boom in 2008. The Conference Board doesn't expect a return to boom-time profits of $16.1 billion until 2014, when crude prices are expected to be $114 US per barrel.

Rainmen ready

MATTHEW WUEST
matthew.wuest@metronews.ca

When the Halifax Rainmen were supposed to host the Puerto Rico Capitanes three weeks ago, it was billed as a battle for first in the Premier Basketball League.

How things have changed.

The Rainmen are fighting for their playoff lives — a scenario that seemed inconceivable on Feb. 26 when Puerto Rico couldn't fly in to Halifax because of inclement weather — and the Capitanes are suddenly stronger than ever.

During the past three weeks, the Rainmen have fallen from 9-2 to 9-5, while the Capitanes have gone from 12-1 to 14-2, clinched a playoff spot and bolstered their roster with the signing of former NBA centre Courtney Sims and the unexpected return of PBL double-double king Angelo Reyes.

The outcome of Sunday's clash at the Metro Centre could determine whether the Rainmen are the contender they looked like a month ago or a pretender at risk of being surpassed by the fifth-place Vermont Frost Heaves (7-7).

"We want to come out there and get a big victory on them and let them know that if we see you in the playoffs, we can get y'all," said Rainmen forward John Strickland.

It's been a brutally tough stretch for the Rainmen. Since their last home game on Feb. 20, they've lost three overtime nail-biters, including last Saturday's 115-113 setback against the two-time defending champion Rochester RazorSharks.

"Real tough" Strickland said. "Especially that last one. It really hurt."

But a little adversity might not be the worst thing for the Rainmen.

"This is a challenge," said Rainmen three-point specialist Desmond Ferguson. "We're not looking to lose four games in a row, we're not looking to lose our first home game, so we're going into this game excited and ready to play."

With nearly 6,000 tickets reportedly sold for Sunday's game, a record crowd could be on hand.

"There ain't nothin' like playin' in front of the home crowd to get us going," Strickland said. "That's going to be good for us."

New Capitanes could pose a big challenge

SHOWDOWN The Rainmen's big men — something of an Achilles heel this season — will have their hands full on Sunday.

The Rainmen, who host the first-place Puerto Rico Capitanes at 2 p.m., will have to find a way to stop six-foot-11 Courtney Sims and six-foot-eight Angelo Reyes.

Sims, who was last year's D-League MVP, is averaging 22.8 points and 11.0 rebounds. He wasn't in the lineup when the Capitanes beat the Rainmen in January.

Reyes is averaging 18.8 points and a whopping 15.1 rebounds.

"Those are easily some of the best bigs in the league," said Rainmen centre John Strickland. "For me and our bigs, that's a gigantic challenge."

Showtime for SMU men's hockey team

SEEDING The Saint Mary's Huskies will be the third-seed at the University Cup as they take another crack at a national title.

The Huskies, who won their second straight Atlantic University Sport championship last week with a convincing sweep over the St. Francis Xavier X-Men, are in a pool with the second-seeded McGill Redmen and sixth-seeded Manitoba Bisons at the Canadian Interuniversity Sport men's hockey championship.

The Huskies open the tournament on Friday at 3 p.m. against the loser of Thursday's McGill-Manitoba matchup.

They play the winner of that game on Saturday at 3 p.m. on Rogers Sportsnet.

If they win their pool, they advance to Sunday's 8 p.m. final, also on Rogers Sportsnet. METRO HALIFAX

They say it wins championships...

MATTHEW WUEST
matthew.wuest@metronews.ca

CONUNDRUM The Halifax Mooseheads' strength is on defence — but as fate would have it, defencemen are looking like the consensus bets at the top of the QMJHL draft.

So when the Mooseheads pick either first or second overall in June's draft, they will take a long look at the likes of Dominic Poulin, Jeremie Fraser and Justin Hache.

"There are some excellent defencemen out there in the draft who can step right in," said Mooseheads head coach and general manager Cam Russell.

The Mooseheads are clearly building from the back end out. Goaltender Mathieu Corbeil is entering his 19-year-old campaign and the defence corps is loaded with youth.

Konrad Abeltshauser, Garrett Clarke, Steve Gillard and Sawyer Hannay are the backbone of the unit. Jamie Bishop and Trey Lewis also factor into the equation.

Scoring, however, is a desperate need.

The Mooseheads would either have to pass on a top defenceman to pick a forward, trade down to acquire other assets and use a lower pick on a forward, or use the pick on a top defenceman and deal one of their young blueliners to bring in scoring punch.

Creativity will be re-

Defenceman Jamie Bishop, 16, required, and Russell will look at all of his options.

"We're not just going to build up our defence for one season and go for the Cup in two years. We want this to be an ongoing process where we're doing this every year."

Phil Nkrumah of the Cape Breton Capers drives the lane during last weekend's AUS basketball championship.

It's crunch time for Cape Breton

The Cape Breton Capers are taking their first stab in 15 years at a Canadian Interuniversity Sport men's basketball championship.

The Capers punched their ticket to this weekend's Final 8 at Scotiabank Place in Ottawa by downing the St. Francis Xavier X-Men 94-77 in the Atlantic University Sport men's basketball championship at Centre 200 in Sydney last Sunday.

"A lot of our players are more hungry," said Phil Nkrumah, a fourth-year Capers forward. "We're anxious."

Added Capers head coach Jim Charters: "We're going to go at it hard. This time of year, you just have to play when the ball goes up or you go home."

For the second-seeded Capers, tip-off is Friday at 1:30 p.m. in their quarter-final match against the No. 7-seed Calgary Dinos. The match will be web-cast live on Streaming

The Dinos lost 96-83 to the Saskatchewan Huskies in the Canada West final.

"They're experienced and they're really big," Charters said.

"Calgary's a pretty tough draw."

Charters said some of his players suffered from cramping during the AUS final due to fatigue and the intensity level of the Atlantic championship.

"And Jimmy Dorsey played on a bad ankle last week," Charters said of the AUS championship

MVP, who scored 35 points in Sunday's final.

"You wouldn't know it. It didn't seem to hold him back too much. This time of year, all kinds of guys are banged up, but you just tape up or do what you need to, to go out and do your best."

And pushing them to do their best will be the fans — a busload of CBU students, university staff, family of Ontario players such as Nkrumah, and former Capers living in the Ottawa area will be cheering the team on.

"They really helped push us through," Charters said of the fans' role in the AUS win.

"And we should have a really good, strong orange contingent here Friday."

Japan has played Canada 12 times since Hockey Canada started overseeing the sledge team program in 2004 but had never won until Thursday.

Field of Play

Scott Russell

metronews.ca/fieldofplay

There is a small, flat island 12 kilometres off the coast of Cape Town with an incredible soccer history.

Here the prisoners of South Africa's apartheid regime, including Nelson Mandela, broke rocks in a quarry as punishment for opposing racial segregation.

At Robben Island, the country's white minority went about the business of degrading leaders of the African National Congress, who they considered to be terrorists.

"They attempted to dehumanize us from the start," Dr. Sedick Isaacs said as he walked slowly across the overgrown playing fields still baking in the hot sun and surrounded by razor wire.

"Once we got over here the guards began to assault us and told us we would never see home again."

Isaacs served time at Robben Island from 1964 to 1977. He and other prisoners subsisted on meagre rations of porridge. They were regularly beaten and verbally abused by the guards.

But in the paltry library, they found a FIFA rule book and devised a plan to play soccer in an organized fashion; partly as resistance, but mostly to endure.

The result was the Makana Football Association, which required every prisoner to take part as either a player or an official. The International Red Cross was an ally in pressuring Robben Island wardens to allow the men time for exercise.

The prisoners responded by grading their own fields and forming a three-division league, replicating the structure of international soccer at the highest level.

"Soccer was our survival," said Isaacs. "It was a moment of joy we anticipated. Once the games were over we would relive them for the next few days, and by that time we could look forward to playing again the following Saturday."

Sedick Isaacs still gets flashbacks when he returns to Robben Island. He lost much of his spirit here, along with his youth. But he has strong feelings about soccer and the common ground he cultivated with his fellow detainees.

Today, Robben Island is a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Tens of thousands are expected to visit during this summer's FIFA World Cup.

While the most high-profile soccer ever played on African soil will unfold at stadiums like Green Point in Cape Town, perhaps the most significant games took place on this barren island just offshore.

Gemini Award winner and author Scott Russell is the host of CBC Sports Weekend seen Saturday afternoons. A 20-year CBC Sports veteran, he has covered a variety of professional and amateur sports including nine Olympic games and numerous world championships.

NHL RESULTS

Penguins 3 Bruins 0

Marc-Andre Fleury made 17 saves for Pittsburgh's first shutout of the season in the Penguins' 3-0 victory over the Boston Bruins on Thursday night.

After their much-anticipated retaliation against Matt Cooke, the Bruins showed little passion despite fighting for a playoff berth. They are eighth in the Eastern Conference, three points ahead of the New York Rangers and Atlanta for the final spot.

Cooke, whose blindside hit sidelined Boston's Marc Savard indefinitely with a Grade 2 concussion in Pittsburgh on March 7, took the ice for the first time 1:53 into the game as fans booed loudly. Just five seconds later, he and Shawn Thornton brushed against each other in the faceoff circle to the left of the Penguins net.

They dropped their gloves and, in a brief exchange, traded punches before Cooke's helmet fell off and he went to the ice. Thornton, who kept swinging while Cooke was crouched in a vulnerable position, was given a 10-minute misconduct. Both also received fighting majors.

After serving his penalty, Cooke skated back to his bench to more boos at 7:50 of the first period.

Then, just 44 seconds later, Tyler Kennedy scored his 10th goal of the season when he lifted a shot from the right circle over goalie

Tuukka Rask.

Alex Ponikarovsky made it 2-0 with 15 seconds left in the second period when he redirected a shot by Kris Letang. And Michael Rupp finished the scoring 5:14 into the third period when he skated alone up the right and beat Rask to the far side for his 13th goal.

The Bounty Hunter begins with Jennifer Aniston breaking free from the trunk of Gerard Butler's car. And once moviegoers see this film, the actress may consider crawling back in.

In this largely unfunny hybrid of a romantic-comedy/action flick, Butler plays Milo, an ex-cop turned bounty hunter who gets the call to track down his journalist ex-wife (Aniston) when she ditches out on a court appearance.

Thinking it will be easy money (he knows where she lives after all), Milo traces her simply enough but soon the pair find themselves involved in a mysterious unsolved case, being chased by loan sharks and oops! Falling in love all over again!

Yes, it's as cooked up as a date movie can get but it wouldn't suffer as much had the script at least delivered a few zingers. It doesn't.

Then again, Director Andy Tennant (Fool's Gold) isn't exactly known for a subtle touch.

Even so, trying to force a marriage of car chases and romantic-comedy may be the most questionable device.

ence from investing in whatever mysterious affection these characters might feel for each other. It certainly isn't revealed through charming dialogue.

In fact, even Butler and Aniston appear to realize this concoction isn't going anywhere and it strains their questionable on-screen chemistry.

Moreover, the absence of comedy is only heightened by a seemingly endless mix of music whose distracting placement could possibly be mistaken as the soundtrack to an entirely different movie.

Then again, that may have been just wishful thinking on my part.

Classification: 18A
Rating: Ⓢ

PHIL BROWN

REVIEW If you like seeing graphic close-ups of torsos being torn open to remove vital organs, then Repo Men is a movie for you.

It seems like that's all director Miguel Sapochnik was interested in filming in his debut feature as he fills the screen with bloody entrails every few minutes.

Unfortunately Sapochnik is bored by simple pleasures like clear storytelling and compelling characters because every scene that doesn't feature gore is lazily assembled and often incomprehensible.

Set in a world where corporations specialize in producing prohibitively expensive artificial organs that require payment plans, Jude Law and Forest Whitaker star as a pair of repo men assigned to involuntarily remove organs from customers who are late on payments.

The concept is ripped off of a Monty Python sketch, but is clever enough to deliver consistent dark comedy for about 20 minutes.

Unfortunately this is a feature length movie and once Jude Law gets his own artificial heart and faces off against his former employers, things get increasingly absurd to the point that any audience member with a brain will be forced to throw their popcorn at the screen out of sheer frustration.

It all climaxes with one of the most ludicrous scenes ever caught on film in which Law and his newfound girl-friend make out while tearing holes in each other to scan their artificial organs into a computer.

Simply put, Repo Men is a disaster.

Enter the Dragon movie

STEVE GOW
for Metro Canada

Filmmakers Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders know how to make a dragon movie. And the animators proved it by directing the newest family adventure to hit theatres — How to Train a Dragon.

In the 3-D-animated comedy (which is based on a popular series of kids' books), Canadian actor Jay Baruchel voices Hiccup, a bumbling young Viking who gains the respect of his family and friends after he trains a dragon — the dreaded enemy of the Norse (at least in this film).

So what exactly are the secrets to making an animated dragon movie? We got the answers

How To Train A Dragon opens next Friday

Jay Baruchel lends his voice to How To Train a Dragon.

when DeBlois and Sanders (Lilo & Stitch) recently visited Toronto:

First, make good source material your own.

"The world of the books differs considerably from what we did," said DeBlois who explained that they turned the author's "iguna-sized dragon" into a menacing black monster. "We needed one that was powerful and dangerous... (the studio) ultimately wanted a big fantasy adventure and so the elements were there but it took some hardline decisions."

Next, find a partner.

"(Chris and I) write together and we direct together and we just act as each other's toughest critics," explained DeBlois. "I trust his sensibility and he trusts mine... it's like two soul musicians who write better music together than they do separately."

The film also featured more than 300 crew members working over a brief 14-month schedule. "You have like fifty scenes out there at once that are in various stages of being produced so it's a marathon," added Sanders.

"You've got to keep your energy up so that's another reason to partner with somebody — there's just so much to do."

Finally, hire a great cast that includes Baruchel and Gerard Butler.

"They really worked their characters; they really want to get inside the heads of them," said DeBlois of a voice cast that also included talk-show host Craig Ferguson.

"It's a very draining thing strangely to stand in front of a microphone and do these lines over and over again and try to picture a scene that isn't really happening around you," added Sanders.

Wimpy Kid mere child's play

REVIEW

Sometimes you have to feel sorry for pint-sized young film-goers. There are certainly plenty of movies out there for kids, but most of them are incredibly bland exercises made by adults trying too hard to ensure that they don't offend children's delicate sensibilities.

For the most part this isn't done to please kids, but their parents who want to be sure they aren't warping young minds.

This leads to countless projects like Diary Of A Wimpy Kid, a film that is sweet and has its heart in the right place, but offers no surprises.

ing on his first year in middle school.

He's suddenly all too conscious of the need to seem cool and fit in, immediately embarking on a quest to raise his social status.

Of course, it all goes wrong and soon he's ruining amateur stage productions, fighting with bullies, working as a hall monitor, and participating in a few other kid movie clichés.

It's a slick production with some impressive work from the child actors (including Chloe Moretz, who will soon be seen taking out dozens of grown men as the world's youngest assassin in Kick Ass) and a nice message about individuality.

But sadly it's missing spark and creativity.

Anything for Baumbach

Stiller just happy to work with director in Greenberg

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News

Ben Stiller had little trouble relating to his character in Greenberg — Noah Baumbach's new film about a misanthropic failed musician adrift in Los Angeles after a nervous breakdown — but he insists that's just because of a monumental birthday.

"I think a lot of people could identify with what he's going through," Stiller explains, tying Greenberg's neuroses to turning 40. "For me it was a big birthday — it's already a while ago. It's a point in your life when you go, 'Wow, I guess I don't have more ahead of me than I have behind me.'"

Heavy stuff for a film that's ostensibly a comedy, but it's the warped worldview of the character that interested Stiller.

"It's a classic midlife situation, but it can be very hard for somebody who hasn't gotten to a place where they wanted to be," he says. "I think you'd be a little callous or have a pretty big sense of yourself to think that anybody's immune from that."

Midlife crisis talk aside, Stiller was mostly just happy to get a chance with writer-director Baumbach.

"I'm a very big fan of his," he says. "I would've done probably any role he sent me. Movies like that don't come around that often."

Certainly 44-year-old Stiller, with a thriving career as an actor, a writer and a director, doesn't have to worry about relating to his character's lack of success. Everyone has goals, Stiller says, but it's important to not bog yourself down with them.

"I don't think you can do that to yourself and be a happy person. I think you just have to have a sense of where you're at," he says. "To me, the biggest thing that I'm trying to get to is just to be OK in the moment, just be OK where I am right now. Because that's the only place that I've ever found true happiness. Anything that's result-oriented never ends up being that fulfilling because it's not in the moment. That's the lesson that I keep on getting taught and trying to learn."

Another way Stiller's

been finding happiness lately is through his charity work, recently becoming one of the most vocal supporters of relief in Haiti.

But with the earthquake that devastated the country fading from public memory, Stiller says he and his organization are working even harder to keep awareness up. "It is hard because it's a long-term rebuilding process, and there's never been anything like this. And I think people, you know, through just natural human inclination, have to detach at a certain point," he says. "Our job is just to keep the attention there. And I think that will be in increments, like in six months saying, 'Hey, we're building this bunch of schools here,' or in a year we're going to do this fundraiser, because it is hard to keep people's attention on it."

Satisfying thrill ride

The Ghost Writer

Director: Roman Polanski

Stars: Pierce Brosnan, Ewan McGregor

Classification: STC

Rating: ****

NED EHRBAR

Metro World News

It's difficult to watch Roman Polanski's grippy and enjoyable new thriller, The Ghost Writer, without being reminded of current events involving both the director and former British Prime Minister Tony Blair, on whom the film's Adam Lang (Pierce Brosnan) is obviously — if not explicitly — based.

It doesn't help matters that both Polanski and Blair have faced very high-profile legal challenges leading up to the film's release.

But even without the real-world signifiers, the film

is a satisfying, stylish ride, showing once again that, legal and personal issues notwithstanding, Polanski is still a great filmmaker.

Of course, much of that is to do with author Robert Harris, who adapted the screenplay from his own novel, and stars Brosnan and Olivia Williams, turning in career-high performance as the embattled former PM and his wife under siege at a publisher's vacation home in New England while protesters chant outside the gates and charges from the International Criminal Court loom.

Into this mix is thrown Ewan McGregor as an unnamed ghost writer brought in to spruce up Lang's memoirs after the previous ghost writer's apparent suicide. McGregor's character is in over his head from the get-go, providing the Scottish actor's brow plenty of exercise.

The only real drawbacks to the film are the often garish digital effects — used by necessity since Polanski couldn't actually go on location to the U.S. or England.

It can be distracting when a great performance is given before a clearly green-screened bay window overlooking the Atlantic.

Stella serves up a sensual taste of India

ANNE BRODIE
for Metro Canada

FEATURE Don McKellar and Lisa Ray star in Dilip Mehta's Cooking with Stella, a comic fable set in the split world of New Delhi, India.

Ray plays a newly installed Canadian High Commissioner and McKellar's her stay at home husband; they have a tough time adjusting to the class system in their own home.

They live in the relative luxury of the diplomatic compound staffed by servants who live in the real, down-and-dirty New Delhi, including a cook named Stella who runs a black market business with Canadian supplies.

"It was great to be in India and have a job and a reason to be there," says McKellar. "It's not the easiest city to explore; it's a chaotic city, but it's a sensual city. The cliché about India is true — it is very sensual with smells and sounds and noise. And touch! People touch you, there is no personal space. It's sort of overwhelming.

His character's relationship with Stella is a complicated one. She doesn't want him breathing down her neck while she bootlegs the Commission's food and supplies. She reluctantly agrees to be his cooking guru and ups her con game.

Filmmaker and photojournalist Dilip Mehta nursed the idea for a story for years. He wanted to reflect a more realistic contemporary India.

"We have all seen the exotic, erotic and poverty films about India. But there is a 300 million strong middle class. Why aren't we doing stories about that? Because colour and poverty sell. If I said this about Slumdog Millionaire, you'd be talking about me in the past tense. I'd be dead."

Atom power transforms Amanda

Seyfried perfect for Chloe,
Canadian director says

RICHARD CROUSE
for Metro Canada

In Chloe, the new psychological thriller from Canadian director Atom Egoyan, Amanda Seyfried plays an escort hired by Catherine (Julianne Moore) to test her husband's (Liam Neeson) fidelity.

Following starring roles in Mean Girls, Mama Mia and the popular HBO show Big Love, this is her first real adult part. It's a complicated and showy role for the 25-year-old actress, and she credits Egoyan with pushing her to deepen the character by exploring every facet of Chloe's life.

"It's a broad spectrum of emotions the audience feels about her," she says, "and in order to make the audience feel that way you have to play it right and in order for me to play it right I had to have Atom Egoyan."

"Mr. Egoyan," she continues, "is a genius and he's what good filmmaking is all about. I know it's going to be difficult for me to choose my next project based on what I just went through with him. It has raised the bar into a very high place."

It's obvious that Seyfried admires Egoyan, but it appears to be a mutual appreciation society. In a separate interview the director called the actress's audition

"exceptional."

"There were a lot more famous people than her we considered but she was our gal," he said. "We knew that from the moment we did the audition. There was just something about her. Fortunately in the intervening period she suddenly became a star with Mama Mia."

Her star was on the rise before they made the film, but on the first day Egoyan had a moment of doubt.

"I have this reputation for hiring very young actresses," he says, "and the day she arrived in Toronto I thought, 'My God, she's a child. We've made a mistake.' But we needed the separation in age between Julianne (Moore) and her. That was really very important."

Any doubts were soon quashed when Seyfried went to work, however.

"She's a really good actress. She really grew into the role," he says.

Thrush Hermit is back together for a short tour. The band performs in Halifax tonight.

The return of Thrush Hermit

Seminal '90s indie act reunite for mini-tour

CAM LINDSAY
for Metro Canada

With nostalgia for the '90s in full swing, it makes sense for a band as beloved as Thrush Hermit to reunite. Many felt the seminal East Coast indie band called it quits far too early in the midst of a creative peak in 1999, following the release of their second album, Clayton Park.

The whirlwind reunion mini-tour (shows in Moncton, Halifax, Waterloo, Peterborough, Ottawa and Toronto) is a "sort of celebratory jaunt" to loosely coincide with the anniversary of their demise, explains vocalist/guitarist Rob Benvie. "The idea had been kicking around in a half-assed kind of way for a while.

"Last summer I spent some time in India and while there suffered a bout of deep nostalgia, part of which involved listening to the old records and thinking wistfully of years past. I hit up the guys on the idea and we all agreed the time was right."

"I think we're pretty aware that this tour is all about fun and celebrating happy memories — for us, as well as those that come out."

Rob Benvie

Their nine sold-out shows confirm that Thrush Hermit fans feel the same. Benvie says they "originally intended on only doing two or three shows. However, once the word got out, offers rolled in and we expanded the project."

The members hitting the stage will be the most familiar lineup: Benvie, Joel Plaskett, Ian McGettigan and Cliff Gibb. Fully aware of the expectations that come with reforming after a decade, Benvie says, "We're a bit older, but not that old. And we've all kept actively rocking in other forums since, so cascading back into the classic Hermit paradigm shouldn't be too tough. We intend on making it just as mighty, if not mightier, than we were in our prime."

In order to do it right, the band will have new merch on hand including

"attractive new shirts" and a seven-disc set compiling their complete discography for sale. Containing six CDs and a DVD with a 1999 doc and unseen footage, Benvie considers it "the ultimate reward for those that still pledge allegiance to the Hermit."

As for what happens after they close their last set at an all-ages gig on March 28 in Toronto, Benvie is unequivocal. As far as anything new, the band has "no desire to get that machinery rolling again. I think we're pretty aware that this tour is all about fun and celebrating happy memories — for us, as well as those that come out."

Singer and guitarist Alex Chilton dies

PEOPLE Singer and guitarist Alex Chilton, known for his influential work with bands the Box Tops and Big Star, died Wednesday. He was 59.

Chilton died at a hospital in New Orleans after experiencing what appeared to be heart problems, said his long time friend John Fry.

Chilton was the gravel-voiced teenage singer for the pop-soul outfit the Box

Tops, whose 1967 hit "The Letter" opened with the line "Gimme a ticket for an aeroplane..." Their other hits were "Soul Deep" and "Cry Like a Baby." Chilton grew up in Memphis, Tenn., and formed the band with friends from school.

"Alex was an amazingly talented person, not just as a musician and vocalist and a songwriter, but he was intelligent and well read and interested in a wide number of music genres," said Fry, owner of Ardent Studios.

Chilton's short run with Big Star brought less mainstream success but made him a cult hero to other rock musicians.

James Lipton hosts a new season of Inside The Actors Studio.

Actors go inside the studio for a new TV season

IAN JOHNSTON
for Metro Canada

James Lipton is legendary for the in-depth research he puts into every interview on Inside The Actors Studio.

But to hear him tell it, the secret to the TV show's success is the stuff he can't prepare for.

"We don't do pre-interviews with our guests. So when we meet on stage, it's for the first time. It's like a high wire act without a net," says Lipton, who begins his 16th season of hosting the Bravo series Sunday.

"The interviews are like self-portraits. The questions are meant to provoke an honest response. So I decided early on there would be no pre-interview. It forces us into a conversation."

Still, as conversations

"Lipton claims he works two weeks, 14 hour days, in compiling that notorious stack of 400 question cards he uses during each and every interview."

go, Inside The Actors Studio can be pretty intense. Lipton claims he works two weeks, 14 hour days, in compiling that notorious stack of 400 question cards he uses during each and every interview.

"I sleep only a few hours a night, so that helps," says Lipton, who conducts the interviews in front of students from the Actors Studio Drama School in New York.

"But I edit the show as well. You only see a portion of the interview.

Sometimes they go four hours and I have to personally shut it down. Otherwise, they'd go all night.

"The record was Barbra Streisand. She went to twenty-three in the morning."

This season's interviews are an eclectic mix that kicks off with director James Cameron (Avatar). After that, those subjecting themselves to Lipton's scrutiny include everyone from the band Bon Jovi, to writer/director Judd Apatow (Superbad), to the voice cast of TV's Family Guy.

Lipton — whose age is listed in various sources as a surprising 83 — prefers to keep his birthday a mystery.

"This business is very ageist," says Lipton, whose six-plus decade resume includes stints as a poet, novelist, Broadway lyricist, soap opera writer, and actor.

"In my early acting days, I used to add years to my age so I'd be considered for leading man parts. Perhaps it's coming back to haunt me."

Sweden's Battle of the Blades wants Sundin

The stage is set for retired Toronto Maple Leafs star Mats Sundin to join Battle of the Blades. Now it's just a matter of convincing the longtime NHLer to take part.

The show's executive producer John Brunton says the massively popular CBC-TV series, which begins shooting a second season in Toronto this summer, is bound for Sweden after inking its first deal to bring the Canadian format overseas. "There's tons of great superstar hockey players in Sweden, even going back to our Maple Leaf Borje Salm- ing," Brunton says of possible Swede contestants.

"Would we love to get Mats Sundin involved in our project in Sweden in some capacity, whether it's as a judge, or a skater, or in some way, shape or form? That would be a home run for us."

But it's early going yet.

Brunton says the deal with Swedish distributor Sparks Network was finalized last week, and prospects for a Swedish Battle have yet to be determined.

However, he says the Swedish format would follow Canada's lead from last year, when former NHLers including Tie Domi, Claude Lemieux and Bob Probert were turned into unlikely sequined sensations by pairing them with champion ice dancers in weekly competitions.

Former Edmonton Oiler Craig Simpson and figure skater Jamie Sale won the inaugural competition, which featured Hockey Night In Canada's Ron MacLean and former skating champ Kurt Browning as hosts.

Swedish defenceman Alex Edler predicted the show could have legs in hockey-crazy Sweden.

"I think it will be good. There's a lot of those shows ... Dancing with the Stars or whatever it's called," Edler said during a Vancouver Canucks practice.

"I think they'll [Swedish TV audiences] enjoy it if they get some good hockey players on there," Edler said during a Vancouver Canucks practice.

Murdoch Mysteries finds a home in U.K.

TV It seems the Brits are smitten with the Canadian super sleuth in Murdoch Mysteries.

The show airs on UK-TV's Alibi channel and the station's online fan forum is packed with kudos for the Gemini Award-winning detective series that's set in 19th century Toronto.

And star Yannick Bisson says a group of fans followed the cast around when they recently filmed in Bristol, England for the first time.

They were very protective and made sure everyone felt welcome, he said. "It was like it was their show and we're their people," Bisson said with a laugh in a recent interview.

"And these people are very picky about their murder mysteries and they're very picky about their Victorian-era shows. And you know, they wrote the style, and for them to like it is a huge honour."

Murdoch Mysteries is based on the novels of Toronto writer Maureen Jennings and airs Sundays on Citytv in Canada. Bisson stars as William Murdoch, a dashing detective who employs forensic techniques that were radical in the late 1800s, like fingerprinting and trace evidence.

Murdoch Mysteries has been airing since 2008 and Bisson said he doesn't take a day for granted.

"There are so many events and things that conspire against the success of a show that you just never really know — whether it's a strike or global economic crises," said the Montreal native.

Cameron Bright intimidates as New Moon's vampiric Alec

CHRIS ALEXANDER
for Metro Canada

Amidst its gooey layers of romantic delirium, last year's box office igniting Twilight sequel New Moon (arriving on DVD and Blu-ray this Saturday) had a few welcome additions to its vampire riddled mythology.

One was the introduction of a pack of testosterone powered werewolves; the other — more effective — bonus was the appearance of the dreaded Volturi, a black cloaked sect of ruthless, red-eyed aristocratic bloodsuckers led by Oscar-nominated actor Michael Sheen (Underworld, Frost/Nixon).

Hidden among the Volturi's pasty faced ranks was actor Cameron Bright. If the name doesn't immediately jump out at you, the face just might. Bright, now 17, is the former child star of such thrillers as the 2004 sci-fi shocker Godsend, the eerie Nicole Kidman melodrama Birth and the over the top 2006 film Running Scared. In New Moon, he plays Alec, a powerful vampire who — like his intimidating brethren — is neither good nor evil.

"I see the Volturi as the government," says Bright.

"They're the leaders of the vampire nation, the ones who enforce the laws. And if you're a leader you have to make difficult decisions, sometimes, and you have to be strong... and feared."

And fear is what the Volturi trade in. Bright's Alec is at first glance, an almost cherubic figure, but one who wields the lethal ability to completely shut off his victims senses, rendering them virtual vegetables. It's just another novel re-imagining of an iconic monster — the vampire — that has caused both the Twilight books and the films to be controversial amongst purists.

"I think our vampires are really interesting," says the actor.

"We have a side history, something unique. Sometimes I hear people criticizing the way the vampires are presented in the film, the fact that we glitter and turn into diamonds but, here's the thing: vampires don't exist! We can portray them anyway we want to."

Usher has long-term plans for Bieber

Millions of Justin Bieber's teenaged admirers would claim to be the 16-year-old's biggest fan.

But they might have some competition from R&B star Usher.

As Bieber prepares to drop his debut album, the 16-year-old's high-profile mentor is already looking a dozen years into the future.

Usher — who was instrumental in discovering the Canadian and igniting his fledgling career — has always had lofty expectations for the mop-topped youngster.

And following Bieber's shockingly quick ascent to the top of the international pop heap, Usher's confidence in the teen-popper has only grown.

"I'm thinking of the Justin that you're going to know when he's 12 years into his career, not just in the moment now," Usher told The Canadian Press in a telephone interview yesterday from his Atlanta home.

"Great artists mature with time. ... To see him now at this age, and think about where he's going to be when he begins to bring real music full circle, when he begins to dictate the sound of the future — I'm looking forward to those days.

"When I first saw him, I thought about that — I didn't think about how cute he was, or how personable he was, and how much swag he had."

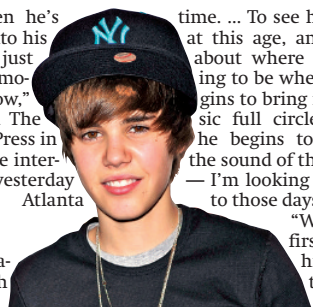

And of course, since that first meeting, everything has changed for Bieber.

It was back in 2007 when Bieber's mother took to YouTube to upload a collection of clips of the then-13-year-old singing R&B covers.

Those videos — in which Bieber sang tunes by Ne-Yo, Justin Timberlake and, yes, Usher — caught the attention of Scooter Braun, a music manager who promptly whisked Bieber off to Atlanta to meet with Usher.

"When I met him, I immediately knew that this kid was poised to be a star," recalled Usher.

Countdown on for 22 Minutes?

After ratings trouble, sketch comedy show 'on the bubble'

Is the clock ticking on 22 Minutes?

The CBC sketch comedy series concludes its 17th season Tuesday night at 8:30 p.m. on CBC.

A dip in the ratings earlier this season had what used to be called This Hour Has 22 Minutes in "on the bubble" territory for renewal. The season before had been a strong ratings winner, thanks in no small part to all the comedy opportunities presented by the U.S. and Canadian elections.

22 Minutes' team

- Mark Farrell leads a team of six full-time writers into each week's broadcast.
- They sift through 70 to 80 jokes before selecting the funniest dozen or so to include in the show.
- Recent sketches — including

Some key defections at the start of this season — especially executive producer and show runner Mark Farrell, who left to launch his own series,

Mark Critch taking dead aim at Jay Leno, Gavin Crawford as afro-haired artist Rob Boberston, and Geri Hall as hysterical cabinet minister Helena Guergis — have re-energized the end-of-season shows.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

CTV's Dan For Mayor — contributed to a slow start for the sketch comedy series. Moving the studio-audience taping to a Friday night — four nights removed from the air date — also hurt the show's reaction time, making it tougher to compete against the instant edge of shows like The Daily Show.

With Farrell back in charge the last few weeks (after wrapping production on Dan For Mayor), focus and ratings have improved. Two Tuesdays ago, the series hit 750,000 viewers nationally according to BBM Canada estimates, placing it well within the top half of all CBC shows.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

After a difficult season, the long running sketch comedy series 22 minutes has been placed on death watch. It will conclude its 17th season on Tuesday night.

Future of MGM Inc. is up in the air

In Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Inc.'s newest movie, Hot Tub Time Machine, a main character looks around a leg-warmer-dotted ski slope and asks "Is there some kind of retro thing going on this weekend?"

There certainly is at the studio. MGM is dialing back to its past as it prepares to be sold yet again and is stressing the value of its film archive as a major asset.

Six companies made non-binding bids in January for MGM, which owns the rights to 4,100 movies and TV shows and has a stake in future James Bond and The Hobbit films. Now MGM is preparing to receive binding acquisition offers Friday.

It is unclear how many suitors are still in the running, but Time Warner Inc., Canadian-American Lions Gate Entertainment Corp. and billionaire Len Blavatnik's Access Industries are expected to make bids.

None are expected to be more than $2 billion US. That would be bitter for

"We're not giant fans of betting the ranch on anything. We are not known to pay retail."

Lion's Gate's Michael Burns on the chance the company will buy MGM Inc.

about 140 lenders that financed the purchase of MGM for $5 billion in 2005 and now essentially control the company. Equity holders in MGM, such as Sony Corp. and Comcast Corp., have already written off their investments.

If the bids are too low, then the lenders could consider the process a "busted auction" and try to get a better return from sending MGM to bankruptcy court.

Spokesmen for Time Warner and Access Industries declined to comment. Michael Burns, Lions Gate's vice chairman, said in an interview last week that his niche movie studio was interested in MGM, but not at any price.

"We're not giant fans of betting the ranch on anything," he said. "We are not known to pay retail."

MGM, known for its roaring lion and classics such as The Wizard of Oz, has been sold several times since its founding in 1924. The latest sale came at the height of a Hollywood bubble, when Sony, Comcast and several private equity firms took on $3.7 billion in debt and a $250 million credit line with JPMorgan Chase & Co.

to take MGM from a group that included billionaire Kirk Kerkorian.

The buyers believed that MGM's library of movies and TV shows would throw off enough cash to help pay down debts. Future projects looked promising, including sequels to the James Bond and the Pink Panther franchises.

But with the decline of the DVD market, and a lack of regular hits, MGM's library is worth far less now, and cash flow has been inadequate. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bad boys return to small screen

It all began when Walter White, a nebbishy high school chemistry teacher in Albuquerque, N.M., learned he had terminal cancer, then hit on a way to make money to leave his family when he was gone: Cook and sell crystal methamphetamine.

That was the stepping-off point for Breaking Bad, one of TV's most unlikely masterpieces, which kicks off its third season Sunday on AMC (10 p.m. EDT).

The Peabody Award-winning series stars Bryan Cranston as Walt, whose medical condition seems stabilized. He has stashed away bundles of cash from his crystal meth sales. But he has also rocked his family with his behaviour and put himself in the cross hairs of a drug cartel that wants him dead.

Meanwhile, Jesse Pinkman, his troublesome partner, is grieving. A former washout from Walt's chemistry class who helped him gain entry to the world of pushing drugs (while using them himself), Jesse is in rehab now. He is mourning the death of Jane, his first true love, from the heroin overdose he blames himself for.

"This is such a show about change. The characters start one way and morph into something completely different."

Aaron Paul

He is also mourning his imagined role in a midair collision of two jetliners over Albuquerque at the end of last season.

Jesse starts the new season with a claim that he's "done using," and, by all indications, he's done partnering with Walt. But there's more to be done.

"This is such a show about change," says Aaron Paul, who plays Jesse. "The characters start one way and morph into something completely different."

As evidence, you need only contrast Jesse's junkie stage with now.

Now Jesse is clean, in despair and at loose ends.

How long can he fight the temptation of renewed self-destruction?

And can Walt convince himself that he has the money he needs for his family and can walk away from the business?

No point trying to predict. Breaking Bad remains shocking, tragic and altogether unpredictable from the first images of the season opener.

It's also bitterly funny.

"You laugh at things you absolutely shouldn't be laughing at," notes Paul.

The part seems to fit Paul like a glove — at least, until you catch him on Big Love, the HBO drama series about a polygamous family where he plays the straight-arrow newlywed of Amanda Seyfried's character. He is almost unrecognizable from one show to the other.

The 30-year-old actor grew up in Boise, Idaho, the son of a Baptist minister. Experience in school plays hooked him on acting. He set off at 17 for Hollywood with his parents' blessing.

"Typical story," he says. "Pack the car full of stuff, but anytime it rained, my trunk would fill up with water. And the 3rd and 5th gears wouldn't work."

He landed guest roles on TV series. In features, he played Jeff Bridges' estranged son in K-PAX and Tom Cruise's brother-in-law in Mission Impossible III. Then, after Big Love, came Breaking Bad.

He remembers first reading the pilot script, which he sized up as brilliant while concluding it was so bizarre and groundbreaking, "there is no way this is going to be picked up. But I decided to just go for it anyway." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sometimes you just know

ADMIT IT, THEY'RE KINDA SWEET Demi Moore knew her romance with Ashton Kutcher had "potential to be special right away," femalefirst.co.uk reports.

The actress — who met the star in 2003 and married him two years later — felt as if she had known the actor for years straight away and admits she will never forget their first meeting.

Moore — who at 47 is 15 years older than Ashton — said, "It was an effective evening. It was a life-changing evening."

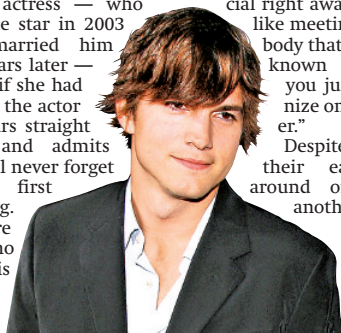

"I knew it had the potential to be something special right away. It was like meeting somebody that I've just known where you just recognize one another."

Despite their ease around one another,

Moore admits the couple initially struggled to express their feelings for one another because their emotions were so strong.

The star — who has three daughters with her ex-husband Bruce Willis — told Harper's Bazaar magazine, "It was so disproportionate, the level of emotion we were experiencing to the time we had spent together. But when you don't know someone, you can't just jump and say, 'I love you.' 'Nice to meet you, I love you!'"

Back and forth, and back and forth, and back ...

LIKE A TRAPEZE ARTIST AT A CIRCUS Despite E! News' report that Britney Spears and boyfriend Jason Trawick have broken up, multiple insiders tell us-magazine.com that it's more complicated than that.

Over the weekend, the couple was spotted at L.A.'s Mondrian Hotel, and also spent time together at Spears' home, according to a source, us-magazine.com reports. "They are on-and-off," another pal of Spears, 28, and her Hollywood agent Trawick, 37, tells Us.

A rep for the singer had no comment on the latest breakup rumour.

Putting away the girly frills

AND PUTTING ON HER BIG GIRL CLOTHES Miley Cyrus feels "claustrophobic" wearing frills, femalefirst.co.uk reports.

The singer-and-actress says she'll be glad when filming on the final series of Hannah Montana — the TV show she shot to fame on — is over because she will no longer have to be dressed up in pink and glitter.

"When they're putting me in sparkles and in pink this final season, I have to grit my teeth. I can't breathe looking like that anymore," she says.

"A friend came by the set one day and said, 'You don't look very happy.' I said, 'I'm feeling claustrophobic in all these frills.'"

Cyrus, 17, has adopted a new mature look of late and looked stunning in her Jenny Packham dress at the Oscars earlier this month. The British designer — famed for her wedding dresses — made a bespoke champagne-coloured gown for Cyrus to wear at the prestigious ceremony and was thrilled to see her in it.

"She fell in love with a white dress from our spring/summer collection," says the designer.

"She loves the softer Champagne colours so I created something especially for her. She is young, beautiful and talented and I was honoured to be asked to create her special dress for the biggest fashion event of the year."

Had 'thousands of pills' from different doctors

SHOULDN'T THEY ARREST THEM TOO? A person thought to be part of the drug ring linked to recently deceased actor Corey Haim has been apprehended, popeater.com reports.

"We have confirmed one arrest in the case, but are not releasing any other details," California Attorney General spokeswoman Christine Gasparac told people.com. The investigation began long before Haim's death, Gasparac added.

It is not apparent if the suspect in custody gave Haim the drugs that ultimately led to the former teen heartthrob's death.

According to the Attorney General of California, the Lost Boys star procured "thousands of pills" from several doctors dating back to 2009.

"That I would need to clarify or defend the intentions or affiliations of my LLC business corporation in the year 2010 is indicative of the intolerances that we as a country still need to overcome," Alley, 59, said Wednesday after a private screening of her new A&E reality show Kirstie Alley's Big Life.

"However, after The Today Show brought fringe bigotry and intolerance into the forefront of the national media I feel compelled to clarify (myself)." AND AFTER THAT ACCEPTANCE SPEECH ABOUT PICKING THE RIGHT GUY ... DOESN'T IT MAKE YOU FEEL A LITTLE ILL? Sandra Bullock is reportedly set to split from husband Jesse James, femalefirst.co.uk reports.

The Oscar-winning actress has been left heartbroken by allegations the motorcycle enthusiast cheated on her with tattoo model Michelle (Bombshell) McGee and friends say there is now no way back for the couple.

A source told America's OK! magazine, "Sandra is devastated. Jesse has tried to smooth things over with her, but to no avail. She's still leaving him."

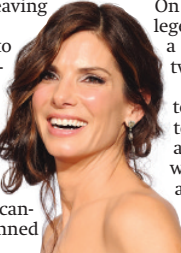

According to People magazine, the 45-year-old beauty left the marital home on Monday and has since cancelled a planned
